Q&A

Q: Can cavalry capable of feigned retreat do this from a standing fight?

A: As it stands, units engaged with an enemy unit (in base contact) cannot perform any actions (including a feigned flight retreat).

Q: Can units retreating and in contact with enemy (who are chasing them) reform?

A: Units engaged with an enemy unit, including when they are retreating can perform no actions - not even a regroup action. [this also applies to combats to the rear and flank]

Q: With regards to Support Charge orders. Since all fighting is resolved after activation and movement, why not just move each unit in turn into an attack rather than declaring support?

A: Due to the rules that state that units must align themselves to ensure that as many bases possible are engaged in a fight, this can mean that there is no room for a second (or third) unit in a combat when it comes to actioning them. Thus if you use a support action, you can ensure that as many bases as possible from both units are engaged in the fight.
